b. in the Kânva-Çâkhâ. — Not having yet discovered a complete and correct copy of this Çâkhâ — three books are still wanting and some of the manuscripts of the other 14 books are rather incorrect — I could not venture to give in my edition also the text of this Çâkhâ, especially as its differences from the Mâdhyandina-Çâkhâ are so very numerous and important, you may look at »the readings of almost every passage«, as well at the single words and their orthography or even accentuation as at the whole kâṇḍikâs and their number or distribution. The best copy extant in Europe is in the collection of the Rev. Dr. Mill, now deposited in the Bodleian library: it contains eleven kâṇḍas written and accented by three different scribes (I. without any date by the one; IV. V. XIV. foll. 1-23a. Samvat 1651 by an other; II. VI. VII. X. XII. XIV. from foll 23,b-48. XV. XVII. Samvat 1875 by the thirth). Other copies are extant only (with the exception of the kâṇḍas I. and XVII.) in Paris.
